We've always been used to seeing the United States try to dominate world politics or pretend to be a "world policeman," but it's very interesting what's been happening in Donald Trump's administration with his foreign policy, especially because of the temperament and ways he uses it to negotiate or close a deal for his country.

The slogan of "America first" has formed a protectionist and nationalist doctrine that all it has done is take America away from the global theme we've been used to seeing for decades.

Many analysts and critics predicted wars or even diplomatic problems with Trump's arrival in the White House, but if we realize what has happened since 2016, we may find that Trumpist doctrine has only protected its national economy, sought small-but important trade agreements; not benefit any other nation or international body with money that can be used for purely internal interests. Simply put, this administration has sought to move away from international political prominence to only protect its domestic interests, but never neglecting the hegemony that has been gained since World War II.

Allies are demanded and put into question with economic threats or reductions in strategic support. Donald TrumpKim Jong-Un

Ties with Saudi Arabia are strengthened and little is punishable by the marked murder of journalist Jamal Khashoggi in October 2018.

Israel is expected to be a key player in the Middle East, but also to serve as a partner to improve relations between the United Arab Emirates, Bahrain, Qatar and Saudi Arabia.

Trump intends to take distance in Iraq and Afghanistan, but supports Kurds and other groups that are against Iran, Turkey or the Syrian regime of Bashar al-Assad.

The war against the Islamic State has subsided since the U.S. government killed its leader, Al Baghdadi.

Since this fact, the United States has gradually withdrawn from the Middle East to "leave the changarro" to Israel, Saudi Arabia, and the UAE.

Although there have been very strong tensions with Iran, an Islamist country seeking control of its chemical weapons and influence throughout the Middle East has been controlled and calmed.

On the other hand, China has exacerbates a trade war that seeks American nationalist protectionism.

So far, the Chinese-American conflict continues, but both blocs defend themselves without reaching a mostly interesting resolution.

South Korea and Japan have been required to have greater economic powers so that they can continue to have U.S. military bases to protect themselves from the threat posed by North Korea and its growing nuclear weapons system.

The Trump administration withdrew from the Paris Agreement and the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP), but it has also withdrawn from WHO and threatened the WTO. It also criticizes NATO and demands more from it, as it does openly with the UN. Are you right?

Similarly, their neighbors are on their knees and negotiate a trilateral treaty that largely benefits their country, but continues to threaten them with tariffs if they do not do what is dictated from the White House.

Mexico is threatened and humiliated, because he knows that "his friend Andrés Manuel" will always do everything he says to make it look like there is a good relationship, even if the name of the country is trampled on.

With Russia, it is intended to have a tough relationship, but favoritism with Putin reflects the weakness that exists in Trump himself.

Donnie's foreign policy has moved away from international conflicts, but never from the international lens. It is intended to protect the United States from ill-treatment and negotiations. It's meant to be someone intimidating, but you're at risk of wanting to be intimidated.

Trump can win votes in the presidential election, thanks to his foreign policy, but I must say he has lacked a lot of tact to convince an electorate tired of his nationalist populism.

HOOK TO THE LIVER

1. That President López Obrador no longer removes his white gun when he talks about the end of corruption in government. Even Jaime Cardenas uncovered the corruption cases that exist in the Indep.

2. What bone will you give now to Dr. Jesus Seade? I hope and no longer charge the era for your business class trips that have nothing to do with your work. He likes to accumulate miles paid with our taxes.

3. What does it feel like to be an "eminent ambassador" for only five days? You can ask Ambassador Luz Elena Baños Rivas, Mexico's representative to the Organization of American States (OAS).

4. Was Andrew Manuel's speech to the UN General Assembly one more morning?
